A large cup, donated by Augustus Gaynor of San Francisco, awaits the winner of the game, which from all indications will be a closely contested one as both teams have excellent records to date. Halfmoon Bay has yet to taste defeat, while the local team has been paying faultless ball, having just added the scalp of the championsip Y. M. I. team of San Francisco to its string.

The officers of the Redwood Council have been working hard to make the day a success and will be aided by the young ladies of the Notre Dame Institute Y. L. I. who will serve as hostesses at the dance.

Drathman, Redwood City health officer and member of the fire department is recovering rapidly from injuries received last Wednesday in an automobile accident which occured at the intersection of Jefferson avenue and the highway. Drathman was riding with Brenton Werder on the city's new Seagrave pumping engine as Werder was responding to a call to a big grass fire at the end of Jefferson avenue.

At the intersection of Jefferson avenue and the highway the heavy fire truck crashed with a car in which five persons were riding and belonging to Dr. W. H. Brown of Palo Alto. The two cars both veered and struck on an angle The truck thrown from its course by the driver in an attempt to miss the other car crashed into an electric light post and was badly crumpled. The car plunged on through a fence and into a vacant lot.

Werder was uninjured in the accident but Drathman was thrown off the truck as it struck the post and received a badly crushed leg. The occupants of the car were only slightly injured.

An inspection of the truck revealed that the engine was only slightly injured by the accident but the frame and body of the truck were badly twisted. After celebrating the wedding of a friend for two days Loper and his wife, Jose Romera and Frank Reposa, all guests at the wedding celebration left and went to the Loper house, where the feast was continued. Later Romera and Reposa left. Later Romera returned with his partner in a wood cutting business, Blas Higueras, and stated that Loper had robbed him of $375 which he had had with him. Chief of Police Collins was told that he then began sooting. Loper was shot in the abdomen, Mrs. Loper was struck in the elbow and Romera shot himself in the foot.

Neighbors hearing the meele, summoned he police who arrested Romera, Higueras and Romera's brother, Paul Romera. The latter was later released, as having had no part in the shooting. When Romera was searched at the jail, the money which he claimed Loper had taken was found in his pocket.

M. B. Johnson Will Be Unopposed at Primaries

It now appears that M. B. Johnson will have no opposition for the state senatorship as all opposition to him was removed yesterday. He will have clear sailing for the nomination at the August primaries. He has made an efficient and trustworth senator and deserves the consideration of the voters of the district.

Kiwanis International Convention Closed

The Kiwanis International convention closed in Seattle, Washington, yesterday following four days of business in which more than 5000 Kiwanians participated. The important matters which were to have come before the convention yesterday afternoon were the selection of a place for the convention and the election of the 1929 president, officers and board of trustees.

Three cities were seeking the 1929 convention. They were Milwaukee, Detroit and Atlantic City. A majority vote must be cast by he delegates to decide the city.

If tradition holds true, the new president was selected from the organization's 1927-28 officials or the board of trustees, which is made up of eleven Americans and two Canadians.

The Redwood City club was represented at the convention by three delegates, President John E. Layng, past-President C. G. Lambert and Sam Winklebleck.

One of the matters considered by the convention was the part which Kiwanis clubs should take in the development of their communities especially in regard to aviation.

"Aviation has sprung up so suddenly, and is advancing so rapidly that it seems impossible to control its progress in any scientific manner," remarked J. L. Johns, of Appleton, Wsconsin, chairman of the Kiwanis committee on public affairs for the United States, in advising Kiwanians yesterday on the building of airports and landing fields, and the proper air-mark ings for cities.

"So many inquiries have been received from Kiwanis clubs in the United States and Canada for scientific information about aeronautics that special bulletins have been sent to our 1750 clubs," Mr. Johns said. "Aviation has become nation-wide, and indeed is already a world-wide problem. In the past year fifty Kiwanis clubs have sponsored landing fields and airports.

"What is needed immediately is an educational program. The subject of aviation is a new one, and has only recently come into prominence so far as the general public is concerned."

The present need of most cities, John advised, is to secure proper sites for landing fields, to have airports municipally owned to prevent monopoly, and the financial expenditures to fit in with the plans of city planning commissions.

Harry G. Young, manager of the Burlingame office of Lambert & Walter, is leaving today for a month's vacation to be spent in Victoria and Vancouver, B. C. and also at American Lake, Washington. Many to Join In Service of Dedication

Local Lutherans To Dedicate Church

The dedication of the Redeemer Lutheran Church of Redwood City will take place Sunday afternoon, June 24th, at 3:30 o'clock.

The local Lutheran pastor, the Rev. J. E. Marozik, will officiate at the service, and the Rev. Henry Haserodt of Oakland will deliver the festival sermon.

The Redeemer Lutheran Congregation of Rdwood City was organized two years ago with but a few members, and services were held in the church on Maple street. The progress of the congregation during this time was such that the purchase of a property for the erection of a church was deemed advisable. Accordingly, the lot on the corner of Jefferson avenue and Clinton street was bought, and plans for the erection of a building, to be used for the time being, both as church and parish hall, were carried out.

Future plans call for the erection of a larger church on the corner of the property, facing Jefferson avenue.

The public of Redwood City is cordially invited to be present at the dedication Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Advertising Money Not Forthcoming From Supervisors

A proposition to appropriate $1400 or two pages in a special edition of one of the San Francisco newspapers met with small favor with the board of supervisors Monday. The matter was taken up by the board with Roscoe Wyatt, secretary of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce. Wyatt stated that the matter had not been approved by him, and that his organization did not have sufficient funds for this use. The best results, he stated, were derived from smaller ads insertel in magazines and newspapers in different places, rather than by spending so large a sum for one advertisement.

It was felt by the supervisors that inasmuch as other papers had been turned down with similar propositions, that this proposal should be given the same treatment. However, the matter was laid over until a special meeting of June 25, when the supervisors will act upon whatever the directors of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce decide is the best plan.

COUNTY IS FAVORED BY DAME NATURE

Crop Conditions Here Reported Best in State

(By Capitol News Bureau)

SACRAMENTO, June 21—San Mateo county will share in the general prosperity which generous rains and seasonal conditions have showered on stockmen of California this season.

While conditions in the extreme northern part of the state are best, still grass and pasturage in San Mateo averages 84 percent of normal, the same average it has maintained for the past nine years, and summer feed should be plentiful, according to E. E. Kaufman, in charge of the federal-state crop reporting service.

Ranges and pastures throughout the state deteriorated somewhat during May due to dry weather and high temperature. Southern California conditions are poorest, but north of the Tehachapi, and particularly along the coast, in the Santa Clara valley and from San Francisco bay north up the Sacramento valley, conditions are very good, according to Kaufman's analysis.

Conditions of cattle and calves as of June 1, reported on a statewide basis was 91 as compared with 93 last month and five-year average of 92, according to Kaufman. Sheep and lamb conditions were 93, the same general average as maintained for five years.

Kaufman's prediction is made of course, on absence of forest and range fires, which already destroyed much feed in Tehama, Yolo and neighboring counties.

C. OF C. TALKS OF BAY WHARF

Propose Purchase Of Water Front Site

ENDORSE ATHLETE

To Aid Fund to Send Alda Silva to New Jersey Try-out

The question of the development of the harbor facilities in Redwood City was the chief point of interest at the luncheon meeting of the Redwood City Camber of Commerce held Monday. The meeting was held primarily for the discussion of better transportation facilities for this city.

Elmore B. Hinman, president of the chamber of commerce, acted as the presiding officer of the meeting and introduced Philip B. Brand as chairman. After a brief introductory talk, Brand introduced G. Thusen, one of the stockholders of the South Shore Bay Transport Co., who explained the franchise which his company had secured for taking and landing freight at this city. Thusen stated that at present his company cannot take advantage of the franchise which has been granted to them by the railroad commission on account of the present wharf being located on a channel, where the water is insufficiently deep for the boats operated by the South Shore Company. He asked, however, that the chamber of commerce take the initiative in securing an extension of the franchise until such time as better facilities may be available.

After considerable discussion of the matter of water transportation D. R. Stafford stated that this community is neglecting one of its best assets in not developing its harbor possibilities. The city has an option, he said, on a tract of 60 acres of harbor land. While it might not at present be necessary to secure the whole tract, he said, at least twenty acres acres of this land should be acquired by the city and developed as a municipal landing, where ocean and bay steamers could call to take up and deposit freight.

Stafford's proposal met with an instant response. It was decided by the members present to begin a campaign to have as its object the securing of action by the city council in placing before the people of Redwood City a proposal for securing this land and developing a water front. Many others present including Mark Ryan spoke in favor of the move and urged immediate action. Edward Harrison volunteered to take up with the railroad commission the matter of the franchise of the South Shore Co.

Owen Merrick, sports editor of the Examiner and secretary of the Northern California Athletic Club, and Laura Herron, coach of the Humboldt State Teachers' College, were present and spoke in favor of sending Miss Alda Silva of this city to New Jersey for the Olympic game try-outs. Both felt surt that she would show up well in the try-outs and that her chances of participating in the big games in Amsterdam were very good.

Upon a motion by Edward Harrison the chamber of commerce representative to the Community Council was authorized to pledge the participation of the chamber in raising funds to send the girl athlete to the east.

"Boy Houdini" Interests Exchange Club

The members of the Redwood City Exchange Club were given an evening of appreciated entertainment Tuesday evening when Arnold McGill, 14-year-old Palo Alto high school boy, performed a series of slight of hand tricks. The boy is an amateur magician of unusual ability, and his tricks served to mystify the Exchangites by their deftness. Frank Griffin was chairman of the meeting.

A ladies night is being planned in the near future by the members of the club.

Daniel Horgan, executor of the last will and testament of Thomas Horgan, is here from Detroit, Michiggan, to settle the big estate of his uncle. The executor's father is the chief legatee under the will. The estate consists of a one hundred acres of the McEvoy tract under intensive cultivation. In all probability the holding will not be disposed but distributed to the heirs.

INSANITY AND DEFENSE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

ARE we all just a little off mentality, or perhaps something more than a little? Some one has said so, and has tried to prove that if we were quite normal, whatever normality may mean, we should never do an irregular thing, never show bad judgment or crude manners, or attract the attention of our friends or the police by our failure to come up to certain standards. Maybe it is so.

There was a crime committed not long ago in the neighborhood in which I used to live. A young man, lazy and selfish and not given to work, in order to cover up a moral irregularity of which he had been guilty, perpetrated another offense which injured one young person permanently and endangered the lives of a score more. The crime was planned and the purpose of it quite evident to anyone who was familiar with the people concerned. Wholesale murder was prevented only by the merest accident. There was no doubt of the man's guilt and no apparent reason to any unprejudiced onlooker why he should not have had an immediate trial and a quick conviction.

I followed the case with interest because of my knowledge of the community and a slight acquaintance with the people concerned. On the opening the local paper bore these headlines in giving an account of the first day's proceedings: "Insanity will be the defense." And insanity was the defense. Here was a young fellow, selfish and without moral ideals, who had committed one crime to conceal another. He was crazy, his lawyer held, or he would not have done either deed. Fortunately, the practical hard-headed working men who composed the jury could not see it in that way, and the man was condemned and sentenced as he should have been.

It is curious how, in these days of clever lawyers and shrewd criminals, the attempt is made to make the unbalanced mind an excuse for all sorts of moral and legal irregularities, and alienists can be found who will prove a man insane no matter what course of action he has been following.

If a man robs a bank, or a minister runs off with the young and attractive wife of one of his parishioners, if a young fellow forges a few checks, or holds up an oil station having sand-bagged the operator—if any of these things happen and the perpetrator is apprehended at once the defense is set up that the unfortunate person who has been guilty of the irregularity is in an unbalanced state of mind and should not, therefore, be punished.

I suppose that later this sort of offense will go even farther. If I neglect to pay my fire insurance and my house burns, the company is still liable, for I was crazy. Any man would be who lets his insurance lapse. If I forget to mail my wife's letters, if in anger I assault a neighbor, if I shoot my neighbor's chickens which are scratching up my garden, insanity will be the defense. It will be a haven for every criminal.

Toll of Heart Disease

One and one-half billion dollars is the economic toll of heart disease in this country, Dr. Haven Emerson of Columbia university told physicians. Add to this more than 100 million for the hospital and doctor bills of those who suffer, and then charge most of this immense amount to the relatively poor laboring class. More than 150,000 of the 170,000 who die each year from heart disease are over fifty years of age.

- Chart Ocean Lanes -

Washington.—An American plan to lay off definite east and west traffic lanes in the vast Pacific will be presented at the international conference for the safety of life at sea in London next year.

Traffic regulation in the crowded Atlantic was organized at the last London conference in October, 1924. Since then, winter and summer, ships of all nations have followed across the north Atlantic the charted routes that were suggested then by the hydrographic office of the United States navy and adopted by 18 steamship lines.

There are seven transatlantic routes or "tracks," the three more southern, lettered A to C, being from American ports and the other four, D to G, from Canadian. Definite seasons are allotted for the use of each. A, for example, the extra southern track, is used from March to July; B, the southern track, from March to September, and C, the northern track, from September to February.

The familiar rule, "Keep to the right," is followed on all but one of the twenty-mile-wide Atlantic lanes, east-bound traffic using the southern ten miles of each and west-bound using the northern ten miles. On one Canadian route, from Halifax, the order is reversed.

Danger of collisions between east-bound and west-bound vessels has never been so great in the Pacific as in the Atlantic because of the smaller volume of traffic and the greater size of the ocean. Several years ago, however, the navy hydrographic office charted east and west routes from Seattle and Portland to Yokohama by way of Honolulu, and it is thought that the time has come to present them for international acceptance.

The routes from Portland and Seattle would follow approximately the line of the great circle to Yokohama, and vessels passing each other would keep to the right, as in the Atlantic. But in the Honolulu to Yokohama lanes this order would be reversed and vessels would keep to the left, as in the automobile traffic of London and Ontario. This is due to the fact that the west-bound route has been charted far to the south of the east-bound in order to take advantage of the Japan current. By heading toward the north after leaving Yokohama, east-bound vessels are helped by the north-flowing current, and by approaching from the south, west-bound ones are not hindered by it.

Peltzer's Home Town Has Bogey-Man Clock

Steetin, Germany.—This home town of Otto Peltzer, the great runner, has one of the most unique tower clocks in Germany.

In the center of its huge dial there is the terrifying face of a bearded man who every second rolls his eyes from right to left like a bogey man. In his opened mouth he holds a metal plate on which the day of the month is recorded.

The clock adorns the tower of the castle once inhabited by the dukes of Pomerania, and now devoted to municipal purposes. It bears the inscription 1736.

Bret Harte Hero Found in Sweden

Stockholm.—The original of Arizona Peter, Swedish hero of one of Bret Harte's stories, has been discovered by a Swedish newspaper to be still alive. He is living in the village of Smedjebacken in his native province.

The old Wild West hero is, however, totally blind. His real name is Per Erik Aastroem, and he is now seventy years old.

Arizona Peter earned a reputation for enterprise and daring. Once when he found a Sioux chief half unconscious, bound and gagged, he got off his horse and saved the Indian. The sweetheart of Aastroem, however, was in Sweden, and, wishing to marry her, he got her a position at a neighboring farm, owned by a Scotch woman.

Shortly after her arrival she and her mistress were captured in their home by a plundering band and carried off. Accompanied by Grey Bear, Sioux chief, Aastroem dashed across the Mexican border, surprised the brigands and rescued the women.

He then rode away and halted on the slope of a narrow canyon through which the robbers had to pass, as Bret Harte tells the story. There the Swede and the Indian shot down 50 of their foes.

One day Aastroem struck a copper vein in the mountains, and soon a group of engineers and miners began to exploit the find. But his fiancee deserted him to marry one of the mining engineers.

In grief Aastroem returned to Sweden, where he found work as a stone cutter. Through an explosion he lost the sight of both his eyes. Since then he has been a brushmaker.

To Dig Up Old City

Mexico City.—A party of investigators headed by Alfonso Caso, archeologist, and Miguel D. de Mendizabel, ethnologist, representing the Mexican Historical Review, will begin a study, before the end of the current year, of the ancient fortified mountain city known as Monte Alban near the city of Oaxaca.

Monte Alban is part of the relics of strange prehistoric builders who modified entire mountain skylines by carving terraces and erecting pyramids until they looked like scallops on a petticoat.

Practically nothing is known of the race that conceived the unique notion of leaving its mark notched on the upland horizon, and the archeological city was old and deserted when the Spanish came to subdue Oaxaca along with the rest of Mexico.

Today, swathed in its age-old padding of earth and vegetation, the site of Monte Alban, seen from its highest point, suggests the work of giant moles which burrowed and upheaved on a geometrical plan. The city whose angles are now curves, whose square pyramids are grassy mounds, and whose sunken terrace gardens are dimples in the earth, looks down upon modern green and white and pink Oaxaca nestling in the sunny valley 1,000 feet below and five kilometers away.

The ridges are leveled off at different heights, and a series of mounds and terraces result that are as confusing in their number and extent as the layout of a large city. The mounds were flat-topped pyramids on which superstructures once stood, as stumps of walls sticking out of the covering of grass still show, and there are many remains of fortifying walls, forming battlements for terraces that overlooked the approaches to the mountain city.

There are series of sunken rectangular terraces surrounded by ancient structures raised on sloping sides that give the quadrangles the appearance of modern football fields with the grandstands all around. Piles of stone and weed-smothered earth left in the centers of these inclosures suggest that they were altars.

No systematic excavations have been made in Monte Alban, but the evidence of occasional haphazard ones is significant. A pyramid structure that has been probed by a series of tunnels in a search for hidden treasure reveals that it is built up of seven artificial levels of broken stone filled with earth and capped by pavements of lime concrete.

The recent earthquake which shook all Mexico brought down some of the rock, filling parts of these tunnels.

In the sides of several terraces or mounds there are ancient sepulchers that have been sacked, but the corbelled stone-lined vaults remain, showing their great similarity to Maya architecture farther south. Narrow entrances leading to the tombs are picture galleries lined with stone slabs carved with human figures that perhaps represented persons who were buried there in ancient times.

Why Animals Do Not Talk.

The only real reason an animal cannot talk is the inferiority of its brain. The mouth, tongue and vocal organs are in every way equal to those of the human being, but though the animal may spend a lifetime in the company of humans his mind never permits him to use sound with any particular meaning.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Building work at State institutions completed since July 1, 1927, involved expenditure of $1,533,025.19, Bert B. Meek, state director of public works, reported a few days ago to Governor C. C. Young. On these completed projects, Meek said, the Division of Agriculture saved $43,714.82 over the regular budget allotments.

Wild fires have taken a toll of more than a million dollars' worth of property in California and have caused at least two deaths, this early in the season. Yolo, Colusa, Butte, Tuolumne, and Tulare counties have suffered the heaviest up to this time.

The cornerstone of the new $100,000 Machinery Building, now under construction at the State Fair Grounds, will be laid by Governor C. C. Young on June 2, it has been announced. The state board of agriculture, the Traction and Implement Association, the California Irrigation Equipment Association, the Dairy Machinery Distributors and the Read Machinery Dealers will participate in the event.

With the election of Jack McDonald of San Francisco as district governor of the Lions' Clubs to succeed W. B. Wells of Pasadena, members of the organization closed their annual session at San Jose last week. Charles Adams of Berkeley was elected district secretary and Long Beach was chosen as next year's convention city.

The ruling of Attorney General U. S. Webb that state employes attending National Guard summer camps are entitled to their regular pay while absent will not result in a refund to those who attended camp last year, according to the announcement of Alexander Heron, director of the state department of finance.

Aroused by recently heavy losses from fires in grain and range lands, throughout the state, Frank G. Snook, chief of the state division of motor vehicles, last week launched a state traffic officer drive on all persons caught throwing burning material from automobiles. Snook's order calls for arrest of all motorists violating the fire law and for rigid enforcement of the statute prohibiting the throwing of burning cigarets, matches or tobacco from moving vehicles.

Sixty-one California cities now have standard model traffic regulations. These have adopted the uniform traffic ordinance sponsored by the Southern California State Automobile Association and the Automobile Club of Southern California to eliminate divergent regulations. Cities which have recently adopted the uniform code are Santa Paula, Colusa, Burbank, Fresno, Monrovia, Vallejo and Calipatria.

California is on the verge of very important improvements in court procedure—a tightening up in the administration of criminal justice and an elimination of red tape. Gov. C. C. Young makes this statement and he professes to see betterment of existing conditions in the immediate offing. The coming legislature, for instance, is more than likely to produce remedial measures of consequences, he thinks. "The object of court procedure," declared the executive, "should be the obtaining of substantial justice, not simply forensic contests between two smart attorneys to see who is the sharpest."

California, greatest of vacation lands, will have more than 6,000,000 motorists visiting its national parks and playgrounds during the summer months this year. This is more than twice as many as visit national parks in any other state. As soon as schools are closed for the summer and children can get away from lessons, the great migration begins in earnest. Thousands of motorists, unable to leave for extended periods, will drive to beaches and close-by parks and playgrounds. This change from the usual order results in added responsibility of the automobile driver, in avoiding accidents, particularly involving school children.

Dr. Thomas F. Joyce of New York, recently retired from the New York City Department of Health, where he had charge of care and treatment of narcotic drug addicts, last week was announced as medical superintendent of California's new state narcotic hospital. Earl E. Jensen, state director of institutions, was in Los Angeles to confer with Dr. Joyce on personnel of the new hospital, which will be opened at Pacific Lodge, near Pomona, July 1. Leroy R. Bruce, secretary of the state department of institutions, stated that "New York authorities characterize the new superintendent as the best man in the country in handling the problems of narcotic addicts." The state narcotic hospital, ordered by the last Legislature, will be the first of its kind in California.

Material assistance will be given state governments in meeting the unemployment situation if Congress passes the Wagner bill establishing a national employment system, according to Will J. French, state director of industrial relations. The legislation, introduced by U. S. Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, would provide $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for each subsequent year up to 1932. The states, French says, would be allotted about 75 per cent of this money on a population basis.

Since June 10, smoking has been prohibited, except in camps and at places of habitation, in all of the 18 national forests of California and southern Nevada. On the same date, the shovel and ax order, which provides that all motorists and pack train parties camping in the government forests shall be provided with these fire fighting tools, also went into effect. These regulations have been issued by S. B. Show, chief of the California district, United States Forest Service, under authority of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the laws of Congress.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby

—Babies Have Nerves

By Ruth Brittain

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

"Knickers" Traced to Drawings of Irving

The word knickerbockers has been traced to the Dutch in the Seventeenth century, but the first record of its use in English, relating to the loose-fitting knee-breeches, dates from 1859. The name is said to have been given to them on account of their likeness to the knee-breeches designed by George Cruickshank to illustrate Washington Irving's "History of New York." This is not, however, to suggest that as garments, knee-breeches were not worn until so late a period, for the breeches worn toward the end of the reign of Charles II gradually got tighter, until William III introduced plain tight knee-breeches that are still worn in England as a part of the court dress. The breeches of the reign of Charles I were loose to the knee, where they ended in a flounce or bow of ribbon, and they continued so during the Commonwealth, but these were called knee-breeches and not knickerbockers.—Literary Digest.

Like George

Dr. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's eminent critic, was condemning in his hale and virile way a long-winded novelist.

"If his hero partakes of food," said Doctor Phelps, "a paragraph must explain that he does so because he's hungry; and if his heroine drinks a glass of water another paragraph explains that the cause of her action was thirst. This novelist is like George.

"'I had a letter from George today,' said a lady. 'He says his mother has accidentally broken her leg.'

"'How like George that is,' said another lady. 'Many a young man would have omitted the word 'accidentally,' and you'd have been left to infer that his mother had broken her leg on purpose.'"

Each mind has its own method.

An Investment In Safety

A LITTLE MONEY invested now and then in some safety devices will often pay big dividens at the least expected time. Many times in this column we have advocated a warning device to be placed on the highway to be sounded when it is necessary for the fire trucks to cross from one of the side streets. We have called attention to the danger attendant upon the condition of the truck depending solely upon its own siren for a warning when approaching the busy highway.

Last Friday an accident happened which illustrates the point. It was only by a fortunate chance that one or more people were not killed or crippled in the crash which occured at the intersection of Jefferson street and the highway.

It would be a very simple and inexpensive matter to have a bell or siren at the dangerous crossings where the fire truck will have to cross the highway. When the firemen risk their lives in performing their duties, the city owes it to them as well as to the traveling public, to make their way as safe as possible. A little money expended now in a warning signal at the most frequently used crossings may result in averting accidents and saving lives in the future.

"Repeater" Criminals a Public Menace

A recent news item states that Governor C. C Young of California believes that the average convicted criminal should be pardoned only after he has worked for selfreformation, and has proven himself worthy of release. It is this policy, he said, that has caused him to issue fewer pardons and commutations of sentence than most of his predecessors in office.

Systems designed to help and urge the criminal to reform and prepare himself for a place in society, such as the parole, pardon and commutation of sentence, are of great benefit and value when intelligently and conservatively used. But it seems unquestionable that they have been abused, by mawkish sentiment that has issued pardons wholesale to criminals waiting for chances to commit further law violations, with the result that crime is encouraged.

Governor Young has taken the proper attitude. Most crime legislation, such as that having to do with the sale and possession of small arms, puts the cart before the horse and defeats its own purpose, for only the law-abiding citizen is inconvenienced by the restriction. If we are to suppress crime we must act along lines of quick arrest, trial and conviction and adequate punishment, without parole or pardon until it is shown that they are eminently deserved.

Further, the law should be so amended that a "repeater" criminal would automatically increase his own sentence with each crime repetition and conviction.

There is Room for More Road Improvement

THE need for widening, straightening and improving existing highways is indicated in the rapid increase in the number of automobiles in use, according to records of the California State Automobile Assoc'ation. In 1918 there were only seventeen cars in service for every mile of improved highway. Last year there were forty cars for each mile, which means that the motor vehicles are increasing at a faster rate than improved roads are being developed.

There is plenty of road to be improved, according to the Association, since there are approximately 3,000,000 miles of roads of all sorts in the United States, and of this total less than 600,000 miles can lay claim to the title "improved." The mileage of really first class thoroguhfares is estimated at only 78,000 miles, so that there is still a large amount of leeway for the rapidly increasing motorists.

Redwood Council Defeats Crack Ball Team of Champions

By JOHN RYAN

Displaying a brand of baseball worthy of champions, the baseball team of Redwood Council 66, turned back the crack Y. M. I. midwinter league champs from San Francisco, last Sunday on the Sequoia diamond by a 6 to 5 score.

Five close fought innings elapsed before "Al" Bullivant's playboys reached Kane, opposing chucker, and the score column. The boys from the metropolis had two tallies marked up before the sixth inning when the home guard hit the war path. Stephens started the fireworks by connecting for a single, and went to second on Paul Bartolomei's clout. Britschgi reached first on an error while Bartolomei was caught sneaking home by the city's shortstop's throw.

Allain, fourth man up, belted one down the third base line which proved too warm for the city's third sacker to handle. "Hawk" Herm sacrificed Britschgi home to end the innings excitement.

Lawlor sent Bill Brooks across the plate in the next round after Brooks had connected for a three ply clout. In the eighth inning the big city boys garnered five hits and two runs to break the tie and give them a two run lead but not for long. "Toots" Johnson, holding down the keystone bag for the Redwood team, furnished the lyric for San Francisco's swan song by sending one into the tall uncut, gaining three bags as a reward and incidentally driving home Allain and Herm, who had preceded him with singles. Brooks added a pleasant note by driving Johnson across the plate thereby placing the ballgame in the ice chest.

Hallett, on the firing line for the locals, fanned but three, while Kane, opposing chucker, managed to send back five via the whiff route. Each twiler allowed but one walk.

Despite the unusual warmth a large crowd of fans were on hand to witness the thrilling triumph of the home talent. Manager Al Bullivant promises another thrilling contest next Sunday when the local institute team hooks up with the Halfmoon council team. The lads from the artichoke belt have yet to taste defeat and an interesting game is bound to result when the two teams lock horns on the Sequoia diamond next Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

New Zealander Hears County's Program From Station KQW

The program broadcast over radio KQW of San Jose recently under the auspices of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce was heard in New Zealand. The program was picked up by R. W. Tapp on a loud speaker in Rotorra, New Zealand, according to word received by Roscoe Wyatt, secretary of the county chamber of commerce.

The program was made up of talent from all sections of the county and included a talk on the industries of the county.

The winner of this game, which is being staged as one of the features of the Y. M. I. district initiation, to be held next Sunday will receive a handsome cup, donated by Augustus Gaynor of San Francisco.

The box score of Sunday's game:

As a preliminary to the afternoon romp of their older brothers, the Redwood Y. M. I. Juniors, minus the services of their regular battery, tackled the Holly Park Panthers, a championship junior team from San Francisco on the Sequoia diamond last Sunday morning.

The ability of the local boys was evidently outstripped by their ambition and as a result the Panthers took the game by a 15 to 4 score.

The visitors drove Haruff, Junior moundsman, to the showers in the seventh and continued to mistreat Ted Keyser, who replaced him. Keyser connected for a homer in the fifth inning.

NEW PLAN EVOLVED FOR TEACHERS' RETIREMENT FUND

All Teachers Must Contribute to Fund

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
(Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, June 20—If not plenty it will not be penury which faces the average California public school teacher in old age.

She will be forced to relinquish the pointer at a mixmum age, and will be paid thereafter a salary ranging from $600 to $900 yearly under tentative plans of the Public School Teachers Retirement Salary Commission, as announced by its chairman, Alexander R. Heron.

If this policy is adopted, and at this writing, the commission favors it, then San Mateo County's 272 instructors in elementary schools and 185 teachers employed in high school or junior college work, will have no choice as to the compensation they are to receive on retirement, other than the fixed amounts allowed by the law at the minimum age of voluntary retirement or that fixed for compulsory retirement, at the maximum age of teaching usefulness.

The plan, as outlined, would favor a uniform contribution from her pay by every teacher in a certain classification. Some provision, would have to be made, however, Heron pointed out for tose teachers who elected to become noncontributors to the retirement fund under the present law. The commission is determined, he said, that "participation in one of the teachers salary retirement systems, the present one or that being planned, shall be compulsory and for all new entrants into the system, participation in the new system shall be compulsory."

The actual trend of the commission, said Heron, is toward establishment of a flat rate retirement system for all teachers, both as to contributions and salary, rather than toward a retirement system based on a percentage of the earned salary of the teacher.

(By Capitol News Bureau)

SACRAMENTO, June 21—San Mateo County office holders seeking re-election and those seeking offices from the outside of politics had better count their friends.

For, under the ruling of Attorney General Webb, the sponsor law demands that they be generously underwritten when they declare their candidacy.

"Every county committeeman must get from 20 to 30 sponsors, who also are voters within his district, to sign his petition to place his name on the ballot," Webb said. The law does not recognize the possibility of scarcity of members of any political party in the opinion of Webb, who says literally it is "just too bad" if there is a paucity of Republicans or Democrats registered in any district to enable a candidate to qualify for the ballot.

Candidates for justice of the peace and supervisors in San Mateo County along with the other 57 political sub-divisions of the state must each file a petition signed by from 20 to 30 sponsors would be sufficient," said Webb, if their names are to appear on the primary ballot in August.

Webb's opinion was given in answer to a query directed by H. Ray Bailey, district attorney of Kern county.

"Some candidates have been laboring under the opinion that petitions signed by from 10 to 20 would be sufficient," said Webb, "but to the best of my knowledge there is no office to be voted on in August which requires less than from 20 to 30 sponsors on the nominating petition."

MENLO CIRCUS CLUB PLANS BIG FIESTA

Program Includes Many Novelty Numbers

The entire peninsula has been joined in the plans of the Menlo Circus Club for a five-day fiesta starting June 30th with the club's annual children's circus and coming to a climax with a big Fourth of July program featured by a air under gay sun-sades, during racing program that will bring the noon hour. All of the proout some of the finest thoroughbreds in Northern California.

The circus, as planned, will be bigger and better than ever, it is declared, with nearly one hundred children of the pennsula and bay distrct participating. Clarence Walter, veteran of many of te Menlo Club circuses, is to again be the ringmaster.

An old-fashioned county fair is to precede the circus with a colorful luncheon served in the open

On July first, second and third, there are to be polo games in the afternoon staged on the polo field of the Menlo Circus Club. These will be between teams representing the San Mateo-Burlingame Polo Club and the Menlo Circus Club.

The ev however, that is exciting most interest among the masculine followers of the Menlo Circus Club activities is the race meet on the Fourth of July. Blooded horses from various parts of Northern California are to be entered in the seven events making up the program for the afternoon. There are thirty-five entries to date, with a large purse offered for all of the races.

Among the entries to date are Herbert Fleishhacker, Hugh Drury, Roger Lapham, Charles Dunphy, Clifford Weatherwax, George Newhall, Jr., Alex Hamilton and others. There is to be one driving race between Mrs. William Roth and Clarence Walter for a purse of $500. Many private wagers have already been placed on this race, it is declared.

The biggest event of the race, however, will be the half-mile race for the San Mateo-Burlingame Polo Club cup. The other races include an eight mile race for polo ponies, a quarter mile race for the Menlo cup, a three-quarters of a mile race, and a half-mile stock race with Mexican saddles and Spanish bridles.

Rehearsals for the circus are being held almost daily in the tanbark ring of the club, and at the same time blooded racing horses of prominent peninsula horsemen may be seen working out on the track of the club.

Boxes for the circus are being handled by Mrs. W. B. Weir, while the boxes for the race on July 4th are under the direction of Mrs. Albert Sihwacher.

GREAT RESULTS EXPECTED FROM OLYMPIC GAMES

Social and Educational Forces as Well as Sports

One of the great things expected of the world Olympic games when they are held in California in 1932, it is said, is that they will provide a new stimulus to creative literature in this state and also will be a powerful influence in other phases of cultural and art life. Moreover, it is pointed out, the games, which will continue throughout 1932, will serve to advertise abroad the fact that probably no country in modern times has so definitely influenced art of a high quality has California.

The modern Olympiads, it is explained, like the Olympiads of ancient Greece, are not merely sporting, but are social, educational and sociological as well. To the cultural work of the Grecian Olympc games, critics say, the fine arts are more indebted than to al other influences combined.

At the world Olympiads at Amsterdam this summer—the last to be held before the 1932 Olympiad in California—there will be not only competitions in all branches of sports and athetics, but lectures and even contests in belles lettres and the fine arts. At the California Olympiad the latter feature will be emphasized to a far greater extent than at Amsterdam or at any other time since the games were revived in 1896.

The exhibitions and competitions in the art at the 1932 games are expected to attract to this state large numbers of the most eminent writers, painters, sculptors, musicians, poets and architects in the world. Here they will find, it is pointed out, much of the same environment and radiant climatic conditions that made the ancient Greeks a light-hearted, intelligent and almost physically perfect people. Running riot in color, with its orchestra of mountain, desert, forest, foothill, valley and sea-shore, California is bound to appeal to them as a place ideal to inspire endeavor. A result will be, it is believed, to provide an unsurpassed opportunity for cultural development of the younger generation of Californians.

Distribution Without Waste

Usually food passes from producer or manufacturer to the broker, from broker to wholesaler, wholesaler to retailer, retailer to consumer. Each of these operations involves investment, labor, warehouse and storage facilities, wastage and spoilage—a tremendous tax upon the family budget. This roundabout, expensive method of distribution is no longer necessary.

By going direct to the producer or manufacturer and transporting car-lot shipments, in one movement, from the point of production to the point of consumption, Safeway Stores have eliminated many of these needless handlings and profits. When you buy your foods at Safeway Stores, you pay but a small profit. This is what we mean by our slogan "Distribution Without Waste."

NEW NASH CAR HERE

Twin-ignition, high compression engines, and custom finished, Salon type bodies led an imposing list of advancements new to the American automobile industry when the Nash Motors Company formally introduced its exclusive "400" series of cars to the motoring public yesterday.

This impressive presentation of sixteen entirely new models, engineered to a degree of operating efficiency and riding comfort never before attained in the same price class, is the answer of C. W. Nash to a universal demand for luxurious motor transportation at moderate cost. It is also a fulfilment of personal engineering ambitions that have extended over thirty-six years of sound, successful manufacturing in the vehicle field.

"It has been the dominating ambition of my whole manufacturing experience," he said in commenting on his company's crowning achievement, "to develop a line of cars of moderate price which would have everything in the way of appearance, performance, comfort and quality that the country's costliest cars offer. This ideal has been completely realized, I believe, in the new '400' series. More than $2,500,000 has been invested in dies and machinery alone to enable us to build this entirely new type of motor car. Nothing I might say could add emphasis to this: it has been the ambition of my career to build such a car as the ,400."

Three complete groups of cars, equipped with the new motors of revolutionary but proved principles, enclosed bodies that set new high standards in coach building, and with a dozen separate but perfectly co-ordinated advancements in design and equipment, are included in this Nash offering to a nation of experienced and appreciative automobile users.

All models are equipped with full hydraulic shock absorbers, front and rear—Houdaille on the Advanced Six and Lovejoy on the Special and Standard Six. Bijur centralized lubricating system, on the Advanced Six models, sends automatically metered oil changes to 21 chassis points at the depression of a convenient foot pedal.

All of the new models embody engineering accomplishments of unusual interest to both the industry and the public. The most striking performance feature, however, lies in the twin-ignition, high compression motor finally developed by Nash engineers after months of intensive experimenting and exhaustive tests. This motor unites for the first time in the history of automotive engineering, multiple ignition, high compression, the valve-in-head engine principle, the seven-bearing crankshaft improved with hollow crank pins, and aluminum alloy pistons, which employ embedded Invar struts to guarantee the closest possible fit.

Another notable development of the "400" series is unprecedented steering ease brought about by the new Nash "hair-breadth" steering control. The cars park and turn with a celerity hitherto unequaled. Their turning radius has been reduced twenty-five per cent.

Woodside

The commencement exercises of the Portola School were held on Thursday evening, June 14th. A well arranged program was given by the pupils of the lower grades and the graduates acquitted themselves with credit.

Mrs. H. J. Slifer, who has been associated with the public schools of Chicago, gave a short but practical address stressing the American spirit, the graduates having already given the flag salute and pledge to the State of California.

John N. Fusanica, clerk of the school board, presented the diplomas to the following graduates, Mamie Mangini, Estelle Zammitt, Louis Piestina, Brita Seebohm, George Jelich, Ester Silva, Nellie Scrabo, Gertrude Nahmens, Annie Piestina, Edward Ainsworth and Peggy Crary.

Mrs. Caswell Swett of Redwood City is spending the week with her sister, Mrs. Joseph L. Ross, Jr.

Miss Edith Patrick visited her friends in Woodside on Wednesday. Miss Patrick was for some time principal of the local school, but for several years past has been teaching in the schools of the Hawaiian slands. She is on the way to visit her mother in Wisconsin, after which she will attend the N. E. A. convention as a delegate from the Islands.

Mrs. F. H. Mighall entertained several of her friends at luncheon on Thursday. They were Mrs. Henry MacArthur, Mrs. Mervyn MacArthur, Mrs. Caswell Swett, Mrs. Joseph L. Ross, Jr., and Mrs. John D. Gish.

Mayo Andreen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Andreen, was married last week to Miss Ada Hardy of Tulsa, Oklahoma. He is the way, with his bride, to visit his father and mother here.

Royal St. John, a business man of Sacramento, son of Rev. Benjamin St. John of Woodside, has adopted the modern method of locomotion. He has secured a pilot's license and purchased an airplane in which he and his wife make their trips about the country quite independent of road conditions. He visited his father last week, but as Woodside is still without a landing field he was obliged to land at Palo Alto. There is a tract of land here that could be made into a landing field and has been considered for that purpose when the demand for such accomodation becomes a little more pressing.

Special School Tax Almost Unanimous

A small but almost unanimous vote was given the special school tax at an election held in the Central school building on Broadway Monday. The tax was to raise $38,000 for the school budget which was cut short this year by rulings of the state attorney general. At Monday's election 105 votes were cast of which only one was against the tax.

The smooth top on the new Gas Range keeps cooking utensils clean

When you are in your kitchen you put on an apron, even if your kitchen is spotlessly clean.

Gas is a clean fuel. However, a smooth top is built into the new Gas Range to give you added cleanliness.

The smooth top protects the gas burners from food that would otherwise boil over onto the burners. For clean burners mean clean heat. The smooth top distributes heat evenly and one burner keeps several vessels boiling. It sends products of combustion up the flue.

See the new Gas Range with the smooth top built into the range for added cleanliness. Enjoy this range's fine cooking.

The Colfax Bookplate

By Agnes Miller

W.N.U. SERVICE.

SYNOPSIS

On a certain Monday morning Miss Constance Fuller, seller of rare books at Darrow's Bookshop, New York, notices that the first customer is a dignified old gentleman, who saunters into the alcove placarded "Medical Works." Peter Burton, one of the employees, amazes Constance by telling her he paid $510 at auction for an old law book containing a Colfax bookplate. Suddenly a girl's shriek of "Murder!" rings out. The elderly customer is on the floor unconscious, with his right wrist slashed. Just before the shrieking girl falls in a faint, she calls out to Peter: "Keep it! Keep it for me!" Peter's sister, Nancy, began that morning working at Darrow's. Nancy tells Constance of her elopement with Brandon Tower, an elopement which was cut short when Tower attempted to make off with Nancy's suitcase. Constance explains Darrow's card-index system to Captain Ashland, a nephew of Mr. Darrow's. They examine the book Peter paid $510 for and find the bookplate to be a forgery. Constance is asked to assist Detective Almy in his investigation of the murder of the elderly gentleman. The girl who fainted, Julia Grosvenor, turns out to be his granddaughter. She can throw no light on the mystery. Constance calls on Julia, who seems relieved when told her cry, "Keep it for me!" was not unheeded. Darrow orders Constance to remove the bookplate from the book. Working late at night Constance is startled by stealthy footsteps and discovers Mr. Case, the shop manager.

"I really have the responsibility of the catalogue," I objected, "or at least, I took Mr. Roberts' remarks that way, so I didn't want to lose any time. There's always likely to be a hitch when you're in a hurry, you know."

Mr. Case assented, but without his usual warmth, and went out. I reflected that Nancy and I had scarcely spoken or used our typewriters during our last half-hour's work, which had been spent in revision of copy, and so Mr. Case might not have heard us, especially as his door likely was shut. I finished my dinner, the staff returned and we all went promptly into action on the catalogue.

The work was equitably divided, and Mr. Case, Daisy Abbott, Emily James and Mr. Dibdin bore off their assignments to their desks in the rear. I remained at mine in front, a brilliant spot in a sea of darkness. For a while revision still occupied me; then I pulled my chair into position under the desk, all ready to shatter the silence again with music from the universal keyboard.

And as I did so I heard the time-clock ring!

For a moment I feared some mishap was depriving us of one of the workers at 7:20, to quote my wrist-watch; but nobody came out, and then I remembered that on the rare occasions when overtime work was done, the department head made a special report for the record-sheet, instead of having the clock rung. Moreover, not a whisper came from the rear, where four people were sitting near the time-clock; so I decided, without full conviction, that I must have heard some other noise.

A breathless evening flowed by until ten o'clock; we all found working under pressure rather exciting, especially as we had an unusually fine lot of books to sell.

Then I remembered a copy of a college edition of the Rubaiyat. There was a footnote in it I wanted to crib for the catalogue.

This college edition was kept on a shelf up in the right-hand gallery. I walked up the balcony steps, into darkness that got blacker and blacker each step above the level of the lighted desks below. When I reached the head of the staircase I turned on a swinging light, and could then see my way sufficiently well to the other end of the gallery, where was the shelf on which the book in my hand belonged. On I walked in the dim shadowy stillness, past the tops of the alcoves, my feet making no noise on the cork flooring. I stretched up my hand to turn on the light in front of this foremost section of shelves, and—

I heard the time-clock ring!

This time I felt badly startled, almost enough to cry out. I had just sense enough not to turn on the light right above my own head. There must be something the matter; it was absurd that the clock should register at this time of night, a quarter past ten! Resolutely I whirled around to leave the balcony and investigate what had happened, when immediately all my fears vanished. Below, Mr. Case walked slowly out of the shadows of the central aisle up toward my desk and halted an instant as if looking for me. I was rather glad I had not screamed.

I was just about to speak, telling him where I was, when something closed my parted lips. He stooped down on the left-hand side of my desk, and got into the shadow behind it where I could not distinguish him clearly. I heard a faint sliding sound, and then—

A stranger stood up between my own chair and my desk!

It was a man, presumably young, from his figure, though I could not see his face, up above him on the balcony, as he had on a visored cap. He did not make a movement or sound. His head was bent. From the shadows where I had seen Mr. Case stoop, I heard the very faintest sort of fumbling noise; otherwise the silence was suffocating. Then the stranger moved; noiselessly, slowly, but purposefully, he stepped clear of the chair, a few inches over to the left.

Mr. Case sprang to his feet. Over the corner of the brightly lighted desk, the two men gazed at each other without a sound. They may have stood there motionless for ten seconds; it seemed longer than eternity. Finally the stranger, with the utmost self-possession and without a backward glance, walked around Mr. Case, past the front of the desk to the door, out into the night. Mr. Case turned quietly around, and disappeared into the main aisle.

As soon as I heard him speaking to Mr. Dibdin, I made for his office.

"Excuse me for interrupting! I've been looking at Miss Abbott's work, and it's getting along fast—"

"Good! We'll soon be through here, too." Mr. Case spoke exactly as usual. He looked rather white, but working overtime plus glare from a green-shaded lamp does not improve the complexion.

"Then tomorrow morning ought to be plenty of time for me to finish," I said. "So do you mind if I get the ten-thirty-five train?"

"Go, by all means," agreed Mr. Case.

So I put on my things and went back to my desk and closed it, with the exception of the lowest left-hand drawer, which I opened for one instant. If it was the style to want to steal Clarihew's "Notes," nobody could truthfully say I was out of fashion. With a consuming passion I wanted to steal it.

And furthermore I did so.

I caught the 10:35 easily, with several seconds to spare, and the stroke of eleven found me bolting the Colonial front door of our Elizabethan villa. Having next reviewed the contents of the refrigerator and decided on a glass of milk, sliced chicken and a roll, I extinguished the hall light, and tiptoed upstairs through the stillness, punctured at this door and that by a gentle snore, to my own room.

I took Clarihew's "Notes on Medical Statutes in the Virginia Code" from my underarm bag, resolving to discover its mysterious attraction if the process took all night. I first examined it meticulously page by page. Fortunately it was a thin volume. There was not a stain or a soil-mark inside it. Several pages had never been cut. Aside from ordinary wear natural to a binding a century and more old, the only damages appeared to be a small number of faint parallel scratches on the back, and a few rather deep little gashes in the cardboard inside the back cover. These injuries were negligible; the book was in remarkably good condition. Finding nothing that could give a clew to the interest it had held for so many persons, I decided that the only thing left to do was to obey my orders and take off the bookplate.

I laid a hot wet blotter on the plate, and sat waiting patiently several minutes for the paste to soften. But though I applied an inquiring finger-nail several times to the edge of the drawing, and renewed the blotter more than once, the bookplate stuck fast except at one lower corner which had always been a bit loose. Only after a long time did it even begin to come away from the board, and then with an unusual slowness that tried my patience.

Finally I resolved to assist the hard-worked blotter; and getting a penknife, opened the dullest blade and inserted it cautiously a little deeper under the edge of the bookplate than my finger-nail had gone. I found that at last the soaking was taking effect; the picture was looser. I tried the corners in turn, found that loose lower right-hand one now yielded readily to the blade, got it free of the cover, and then with my fingers began, very gently, to peel off the bookplate. It had to be coaxed now and then, but little by little it came away clean and untorn. Then, as I got more hold on the looser part, I pulled it more evenly and rapidly, and at last off it came with a single swift motion. And then the sight before me caused me to drop the bookplate in complete consternation, and forget all about it.

In the center of the space from which I had just peeled it, sunk into the thick calfskin cover of the old law book so that no hint of it protruded above the surface of the board, was—a key.

It was black, about two inches in length; the shank was long and narrow, the bit elaborately fashioned, the head a solid piece of metal about half an inch across. I stared at it intently, but dazedly.

Curiosity, however, a vulgar trait but often a life-preserver, came rapidly to my aid. I snatched up the penknife again, and very slowly and cautiously pried out the key from its resting-place. The underside was identical with the upper; at its thickest point the little implement was less than an eighth of an inch in diameter. I examined the depression in the book cover wherein this strange old-fashioned object had been lying. This depression had evidently been cut out in the thick board with the very greatest care. No hint of the operation could be either seen or felt in the binding. I replaced the key in the depression and ran my hand across the inside cover. So carefully was the key fitted that even with my bare palm I could hardly feel anything but a plain surface.

I left it in its resting place and gazed at it a moment. Was the book plate—the forged bookplate—after all not the object of the extraordinary efforts put forth by so many persons? Was it the key under the bookplate? This new discovery seemed to eclipse the mystery of the counterfeit print, curious as the latter still was. A key presupposed that something valuable was hidden under lock; a hidden key presupposed some wish to keep the hiding place secret; the widespread search for the old book which had a key concealed in it suggested strongly a determination on the part of the searchers to open the hiding place. My already overburdened bosom had become the recipient of another secret.

After hearing Peter's tragic adventures and Nancy's remarkable escapades and Julia Grosvenor's strange story; after seeing Julia's black satin bedroom slippers and learning that Peter, too, knew some mysterious secret concerning her presence in the shop that Monday, I had found a key in the cover of the law book to which our hoodoo of a bookplate had been attached—this after witnessing that blood-freezing encounter between Mr. Case and the unknown stranger, late at night, in Darrow's!

Now that I had a chance to think about that view of Mr. Case, I could scarcely do so coherently. Mr. Case, the Chesterfield of Darrow's, prying into another person's desk! I had distinctly heard him pull open a drawer. There was not one thing in that desk that could possibly have interested anyone, except Clarihew's "Notes," and he had seemed to take little more than a polite interest in it. And yet—was it an old story to him. Why didn't he speak to that stranger, or give any alarm about him? Who was that second man? What was he after? and did all those people—except Peter, of course—who were pursuing that book, know about the key? And to what was it the key?

I could answer none of these absorbing questions. But my immediate concern, after all, was with the practical aspect of this discovery. Suppose Mr. Darrow should ask if the bookplate had been removed, and then desire to see it and the book again before they were sold. He might well do so, he took such an interest in them both. Suppose Mr. Case should ask to see the book: who had more right to do so than the head of the shop? Suppose Captain Ashland should bowl enthusiastically along with some learned observations about counterfeits which had been omitted from his lecture and required illustration. Suppose Nancy—but I did not feel imaginative.

One thing was clear. I could not likely long keep this discovery to myself, even had I any right to do so. So I decided to impart my discovery to Mr. Roberts. He would not now be so likely to spurn my conjectures about that law book.

Having made this decision, I again picked up the bookplate, which now lay twisted tightly up in a damp roll beside the book, and ironed it out between two dry bits of blotting paper. I gazed at it intently. A bright idea suddenly popped into my mind, an idea not to be carried out in the shop. As I looked at the foreground of the picture, I noticed the marvelous attention to details in the laboratory interior. If I could see something in these details which would have to be pointed out to other people, I could write a blurb about the fine execution of the drawing.

Beneath the lamp on my desk, I slid the bookplate under a magnifying glass, and proceeded to study the foreground eagerly. But soon my eagerness felt as chilled as the fingers that vainly screwed the lens up and down seeking to magnify the contents of the table in the foreground into something that might be quaint or interesting or unique in the annals of bookplates. "Small instruments of scientific appearance" were what had appeared to me the first time I saw the plate; now they were enlarged, but I saw nothing new about them. Some were long and narrow, some short and round; one was a cube with a pattern of slots across one base. Their use or symbolism was Greek to me still.

At last, though completely disgusted that all my effort should be able to produce nothing better than "Quaint and interesting interior showing small instruments of scientific appearance," I decided that that description was the best I could do on such short notice. It was like Mr. Darrow to change his mind at the last instant, and he could just take the consequences. With more time, I could have found out what the instruments were, but not by noon that day. I gloomily plunged my cold hands into my sweater pockets, reflecting that my employer's pockets would be equally empty so far as the profits from that bookplate were concerned.

And then I realized that the left-hand pocket of my sweater was not empty. My hand encountered something crackling, scrutchy . . . I pulled it out. My yellow note . . . Professor Harrington's book-list, my identification of which Daisy had corroborated before Mr. Almy.

And now, perhaps because it had been such an uneventful evening, and the morning was still young—our clock had just boomed out half-past two—it seemed to me that there was no time like the present to look over that yellow note, as I had planned to do when I found it two days before on the floor in the history alcove at Darrow's. As I glanced again at the three rows of slits in the paper, which I had casually noticed when I picked it up first, I remembered having seen three rows of slots, very tiny, but arranged in an identical pattern with that on the yellow slip, somewhere else, that very evening.

CHAPTER VIII

Morning Watch

When in the cold gray dawn I arose, from my chair, stiff with fatigue after the most exciting night in my experience, I was tingling to get to Darrow's. I planned to go directly upstairs on Mr. Roberts' heels, with Clarihew's "Notes" under my arm, to tell him a few observations I had made which had indeed taken a certain amount of intelligence. The book I would then leave with him, so that if it were asked for or anybody tried to steal it, it would be unavailable. Next I would complete the rare-book catalogue with lightning speed, and Mr. Darrow would inform me over the telephone that I had his entire confidence. And, not least agreeable, I could expect a pleasant evening in town, with early bedtime hours. Dropping the bookplate, now flat and dry, between the first page of the old law book and the cover still holding the key, I hastened to town to carry out my plans.

The only hindrance proved to be that none was any good. I reached Darrow's at a quarter of nine as usual and with Clarihew's "Notes" inconspicuously ready at hand among the other books on my desk, I awaited Mr. Roberts with confidence.

But, alas, to quote the elegant female in the poem widely approved of anthologists, who had no more shame than to wait for "him" when he was late to his date, "He came not—no, he came not." Nancy breezed past. Daisy Abbott arrived. Mr. Case, who, I was not displeased to note, looked quite worn out, asked if I were tired. I said, "Not so much as I might be; I got that early train."

Centuries Count for Little in Archeology

For an archeologist, B. C. 7000 is positively a recent date, and an object 3,000 years old is almost new.

In B. C. 1000 the degenerate Cretan civilization was just coming to an end; it had lasted for 2,000 years, and now it was being destroyed by barbarians. In B. C. 1000 the Chinese had already had several centuries' experience of the examination system for civil service candidates. The Mayas, at about the same date, were invading the territories of the so-called Archaic peoples of Central America (whose civilization was from 4,000 to 5,000 years old) and had begun to drink cocoa—an early example of temperance on the American continent. What had once been the flourishing city of Harappa in the Punjab was already many feet underground. Every style of art, from impressionism to a more than German expressionismus, had already been exploited, heaven knows how many times, by heaven knows how many generations of sculptors and painters. —Kansas City Star.

Food for Babies

Another somewhat amusing feature of the general situation is the eminent dietitian letting on to know much better than old Mother Nature what's the best food for little bits of babies.—Ohio State Journal.

Egg Signifies Welcome

The gift of an egg is the usual form of greeting accorded visitors by the Dyaks of Borneo. This greeting holds true to the old primitive ideal that a guest must be welcomed with a gift, says William Beebe in Liberty Magazine. Throughout the whole country, if you find favor in the eyes of a tribe, you are formally presented with an egg on the day of your arrival in the village. And in the heart of Borneo, where food is, in the nature of things, a more or less undetermined quantity, the possession of an egg is a matter for profound congratulation.

Where Courtship Is Privilege of Women

Not only does the Cham maiden in some districts of Indo-China make the proposal, but with her also lies the initiative for divorce. Moreover, when divorce occurs, which it does often, the wife retains the home, the children, and one-third of the property.

Even more favored is the girl of the "maternal kinship" tribes of Assam. She proposes, and, if he accepts, the marriage takes place and the husband must then come and live with her people. And the wife may divorce her husband when she pleases. By so doing, indeed, she gains much, for she not only keeps the children and her own property, but all her divorced husband's property as well. If a husband divorces his wife he must still surrender his entire property and the children to her.

The maiden of Bonda Porjas in southern India resorts to a severe test when selecting a husband. The chosen man has to accompany her into the jungle, where she applies fire to his bare back. If the pain draws a yell from him, he is contemptuously rejected. She takes him for husband only if he suffers in silence.

In Borneo, among the Kalabit peoples, it is always the girl who conducts the courtship.—From the Continental Edition of the London Daily Mail.

Even if some things refuse to go your way, there are other things.

Famous American Actor

Joseph Jefferson was born on February 20, 1829, in Philadelphia. He was one of the most famous of American actors. His chief role was "Rip Van Winkle," in the play dramatized by himself and Dion Boucicault from Irving's tale.

Oldest Languages

With the exception of the Egyptian (and the hypothetical Akkadian) the Semitic languages have the longest recorded history.

Quinn's Advice to Youngsters

JACK QUINN, who admits that he is forty-three years old but who is a few years older according to a number of statistical experts, has been pitching ball for twenty-five years, and sixteen of these were spent in the major leagues.

The other day a newspaper man asked Quinn to name some of the essentials that would be of help to a novice pitcher and, among other things, Quinn said:

Get plenty of rest and sleep; eat good plain food and drink plenty of water; practice control with the fast ball; after you master the fast ball work on the curve; later on work on the slow ball and change of pace; practice fielding your position and covering first and spend hours in this practice; use your most effective form of delivery in the pinches; indulge in batting practice and develop speed. Try to be a ball player as well as a pitcher; never lose heart over bad breaks or errors; never criticize your teammates for weak support; be confident.

Why confine this advice to novice pitchers? There are many in the major leagues who could profit by Quinn's words, writes H. G. Salsinger in the Detroit News. At least 80 per cent of the pitchers in the American league would be better pitchers if they followed Quinn's advice.

All that we ever came in contact with get enough sleep and rest. We always thought that some of them did nothing else but.

The majority spend no time in trying to extend their pitching repertoire. They do not work for better control. They are not trying to improve their curve ball, or their slow one. Many lack a slow ball as many lack a change of pace.

They do not practice fielding unless specially compelled to by the manager. They believe fielding is the job of infielders.

Jack Quinn.

Moriarty compelled his pitchers to spend hours practicing the business of covering first and it was surprising to see how few were able to do it properly.

When it comes to pinches the average pitcher is generally so confused that he will use anything but his best delivery.

Most of them lose heart over errors or bad breaks.

Criticizing their teammates is one of the best things they do. Ball players are notorious for producing alibis but the pitchers produce most of them.

Confidence is one thing few of them develop. They lack confidence in certain deliveries. If they followed the rest of Quinn's advice they would automatically develop confidence.

And Quinn can back up his advice with 16 years of major league pitching.

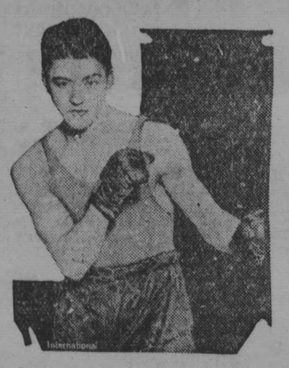
Andy Cohen Gives Boys Lecture on Ball Game

Andy Cohen, spectacular young second baseman of the New York Giants, has carved a niche for himself in the hearts of Chicago youth.

During the Chicago-New York series more than three thousand boys crowded and fought their way into a hall to hear Hornsby's successor give advice on how to break into professional baseball. Most of the boys were members of teams entered in the American League Junior Baseball league.

And Andy's advice was to subordinate everything else to baseball if one wants to make that his career. "Think baseball; talk baseball; pay no attention to anything else," was the advice of McGraw's newest "find."

Wins on Mandell



Instead of a deficit, Tex Rickard has been agreeably surprised to find out that he realized a profit of about $20,000 on the much-postponed bout that saw Sammy Mandell ward off Jimmy McLarnin's bid for the "Rockford Sheik's" lightweight title. The photograph shows Mandell.

CELEBRATION OF BASEBALL ON AIR

Description of Parade and Speeches by Radio.

The climax of this year's annual celebration of Baseball day in Hartford, Conn., when seven thousand boys paraded through city streets to hear addresses by Judge Landis and both major league presidents, was recently broadcast by stations associated with the NBC Red network.

The parade of seven thousand boys, all in baseball uniform and marching to the music of a dozen bands, got under way shortly after 8:00 o'clock, a. m., The NBC network was linked with station WTIC in Hartford from 9:00 to 11:00 a. m. for a description of the parade by Graham McNamee and Phillips Carlin and to broadcast the speeches by the baseball monarchs.

The boys marched direct to the Capitol theater in Hartford, where the first four thousand were accommodated, and the overflow trooped to the Palace theater nearby, connected with the other by loudspeakers.

Speakers addressing the audience of young and old, were Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, baseball commissioner; John A. Heydler, president of the National league; E. S. Barnard, president of the American league; M. H. Sexton and John H. Farrell, president and secretary of the Association of Minor Leagues.

American Golfers Have Hard Luck in England

Out of the scores of American men and women, who have played in the British amateur golf tournament only two, the Australian-born Walter J. Travis and Jesse Sweetser, have triumphed, writes Ralph Cannon in the Chicago Journal.

England has had little better luck over here, although Harold Hilton won the men's amateur title in 1911, while Miss Dorothy Campbell, now Mrs. Hurd, took the women's laurels in 1900 and 1910, and Mrs. Temple Dobell, one of Miss Collett's victims in the present British tourney, was champion of America in 1913, when she was Miss Gladys Ravenscroft.

Two of Britain's greatest stars met defeat on American links in especially notable matches. Hilton, returning in 1912 in quest of his second straight men's title, was knocked out in the very first round by Charles G. Waldo, Jr., who never entered the ranks of champions.

Nine years later Miss Cecil Leitch, at that time queen of the links in Britain, tried for the American women's honors and after winning her first match was defeated in the second round by Mrs. F. C. Letts, Jr., 1 up. In that same tournament, in 1921, Miss Collett was eliminated by Miss Edith Leitch, sister of the British champion, but Edith Leitch fell later before Elaine Rosenthal, a sister of Mrs. Letts.

Baseball Players Offer Prizes on Legion Series

Several major league baseball stars will donate trophies to the leading players of the American Legion Junior baseball league, it was announced by officials of the Legion.

The following prizes are offered:

Ty Cobb—Trophy to the leading hitter.

Play started in the nationwide tournament late in May and will culminate in a junior world series for the boys' championship of the United States. Boys of seventeen years of age and under are eligible to compete.

Would Shift Arms

One of the interesting stories of the moment is that Goose Goslin, outfielder of the Washington team, whose good right arm has gone bad, may try a shift and become a left-arm thrower. It is an interesting story, and that is about all. And yet, Eddie Roush of the New York Giants did accomplish such a stunt, shifting from right to left, as the story has it, because of an injury to his right arm, though Eddie says he always could throw with either arm.

When Standard Oil Was in Its Infancy

John D. Rockefeller, when he was expanding Standard Oil into the greatest business phenomenon of its era, often gained control of rival companies by bluffing with a blank check—because Standard Oil didn't have the purchase money. That is the story told me by the oil king himself, writes B. C. Forbes in McClure's.

When I asked him where he got all the capital to expand Standard Oil, the veteran oil magnate's eyes twinkled.

"That sometimes had its funny side," was Rockefeller's reply. "It seems amusing now, looking back, although it was a matter of grave concern then.

"After we had arranged to purchase a property I would meet the owner and with a lordly air would whip out our checkbook and remark, as if it were a matter of entire indifference to me: "Shall I write a check or would you prefer payment in Standard Oil shares?"

Mr. Rockefeller added that there were occasions when if the reply had been "All cash," he would have had to scurry to raise the necessary money. However, his unconcerned attitude inspired most of the sellers to take stock in the new concern either in full or part payment of their old holdings. "And very fortunately for them, as it turned out," added the oil magnate.

Mud and Impossibilities

A New York woman was recently called to New England to attend a funeral. In telling of driving through the hub-deep spring mud of the little backwood's community to the cemetery, she made a remark almost startling in its significance.

"It made me feel," she said, "as though I had gone back a generation or so, to the time when there were still impossibilities."

The last four words recall that scene in Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" where the children are in the cemetery in the dark and at the stroke of 12, light floods the scene, revealing a field of lilies instead of tombstones.

"Where are the dead?" asks Mytyl.

"There are no dead," says Tyltyl.

Baptism in Public Baths

Govanhill public baths, Glasgow were recently used for the baptism of 160 persons, whose ages ranged from fifteen to sixty. They were converts of an evangelistic and healing mission held in the city by Pastor Jeffries, who is said to have converted 1,500 during a recent visit to the west of Scotland. When the converts had taken their place in the water, after fervent revival hymns had been sung, each person was seized firmly by the pastor and dipped backwards in the pond. A long black robe reaching from neck to ankles was worn by nearly every woman. Two exceptions were candidates who wore a tennis frock and a one-piece woolen dress respectively. Every woman's head was covered by a bathing cap. The men wore trousers and shirts only.

Ring in a Potato

Thirty years ago a young woman, when digging up a potato patch, lost her wedding ring. Recently one of her sons was turning over the soil when he dug up an old hardened potato with a curious wasp-waisted appearance. Examination showed that it was wearing a ring round its middle. It was the woman's long-lost wedding ring, as was proved by the date and initials engraved on it.

MENLO PARK

City Council in Session

The town council held a special meeting Monday night to consider the request of the people of Menlo Oaks to be annexed to the City of Menlo Park. A big delegation was present from that locality and a strong appeal was made to the council for annexation. City Attorney Whitworth went over the legal phase of the matter very thoroughly, showing the numerous difficulties that would be encountered in calling the election and the opposition that would be engendered by Timothy Hopkins, whose holdings would have to be taken in in order to annex the territory desired. Mayor Weeden was directed to consult with Mr. Hopkins, asking his consent and decision in the matter. Should he refuse to co-operate most likely an election will be called and the whole question fought out on its merits.

The regular meeting of the council took place on Tuesday evening with all the members present.

James Armstrong, an engineer, residing in Menlo Park, addressed the board offering his services in the Bear Gulch Water Company's application for a raise in rates now before the State Railroad Commission. Armstrong showed by actual figures that if the raise went through the city would pay from thirty to forty per cent more for water than it does at present. He promised to give his time in assisting the city attorney during the hearing and all he would ask in compensation would be the actual cost and expenses. He explained that he was informed on excellent authority that the company wanted the raise that it might sell the plant to the Federal Water Company, now engaged in buying the water plants of the state. The request was continued until the next meeting.

E. R. Anthony, representing the Southern Pacific Company, wrote the council that the human flag man at the Oak Grove avenue crossing would not be removed, in accordance with the council's wishes. Councilman Walker, commissioner of streets and buildings present plans and specifications for the Buckman building. It is to have an entrance from the high way and not from Valparaiso avenue, and is to be an iron super station. It will be fire proof. From the arguments of the councilmen it would appear that Buckman will be given a permit which has been held up for a long time.

Dale called attention to a nuisance on Santa Cruz avenue, which is to be abated at once.

The resignation of Judge E. P. Clough as city judge was accepted and on motion of Blake seconded by J. C. Ellis, L. H. Cook was appointed to fill the vacancy.

The wiring and eclectrical ordinance was read at the last meeting was adopted.

The dance ordinance, presented at the last meeting, was adopted by the council. The rates are $2.50 for all public dances, where a fee is charged and $5 for a police officer in uniform, that is if such an officer is needed. Public picnics will pay the same rate.

Moreland and Rasmussen of North Fair Oaks applied to the council for permission to conduct a second hand lumber and supply concern on the Russell property on the highway near the school building. The request was laid over for thirty days.

Dale called the attention of the council to the wretched condition of the sidewalk in front of the grammar school and urged that some steps be taken to put in sidewalks. The matter was ordered continued.

The council adjourned until July 10th.

Trial Draws Crowd

The trial of a local man, accused of possession of liquor contrary to the Wright Act, drew a large crowd to the city hall last Friday night. After much evidence had been presented and after heated arguments of the attorneys the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The accused on Monday paid a fine of $500. Many believed that trial was the first ever held in Menlo Park. This is an error for many important trials took place here in 1874, when the town was functioning as a city of the sixth class. Prominent attorneys, who afterwards became famous in the state, took part in these litigations They have long since been called to the court on high.

To Vacation in Portland

Mrs. Fannie I. Kurtz, the popular city clerk, left on Wednesday, accompaned bf her pretty daughter, Miss Myra Kurtz, to spend a vacation of two weeks at Portland, Oregon, her former home. The city council on Tuesday evening granted Mrs. Kurtz a leave of absence from the state for 30 days.

(The following is one of a series of articles prepared under the direction of the Gorgas Memorial as part of its Better Health and Longer Life program. President Coolidge is the honorary president of the Memorial, which has been organized and endowed by prominent doctors and laymen throughout the country to perpetuate the life work of the late Major-General Gorgas in preventing unnecessary illness. Headquarters of the Gorgas Memorial are at 400 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago)

A noted general is credited with the remark, "An army is as efficient as its feet." If this is true of soldiers it is equally true of civilians. While ordinary foot troubles rarely shorten life, there is probably no other quite so prevalent affliction, few that cause so much discomfort, and none that cause impaired efficiency in so large a percentage of our citizens. The interesting thing about it all is that most of it could and should be prevented and if already existing most of it can be relieved without much difficulty.

The physician or surgeon who makes it a routine practice to examine carefully the feet of all is patients who come in for their first examination or for their annual or semi-annual health checkup will agree that it is the exception rather than the rule to find a pair of perfectly sound feet. Thus for instance in nearly every adult he will find one or more corns, in a considerable per cent calluses and ingrown toe nails, to a lesser event but still quite frequently flat foot, bunions, breaking of the transverse arch, and even occasionally ulcers. While ingrown toe nails and ulcers are practically the only ones of these which do occasionally jeopardize the life of the patient because of their tendency to cause septic infections, even so minor abnormality as a corn does interfere with efficiency, and bunions and flat feet very frequently reduce the individual's working ability and physical endurance twenty-five per cent and sometimes completely unfit the indivilual for any and all useful and remunerative occupations.

The expression "to be well-shod" should mean more than to be wearing a handsome, good-looking, or pretty shoe as the case may be. It should mean that, but it should also mean that the shoe pletely unfit the individual for any the wearer has on is giving the maxmum of comfort and insuring the maximum of efficiency. A shoe to possess these last two qualifications, does not necessarily have to be unduly large or ugly; in fact, the best-looking shoe is also comfortable.

Some simple rules for buying shoes are: see to it that the treading surface is sufficiently large so that the weight of the body rests on the sole and not on the uppers; see that the inner line is a straight line; see that the shoe fits snugly but that it makes no undue pressure on any one point. Do not accept any shoe that does not fulfill all of these requirements.

If the shoe salesman tries to persuade you to take a shoe that does not fit, with the remark, "It will adapt itself to the foot in time, "remember that action and reaction are always equal and in opposite directions and an ill-fitting shoe will force the foot out of its normal position just as much as the foot will change the shape of the shoe.
